TUESDAY EVENING, JULY 29, 1879.

GOOD ADVICE TO THE GIRLS -Benjamin F. Taylor, the poet, has written a letter to a young girl at the Loweille Academy, in which he mixes up poetry and good advice in equal doses most charmingly. What Mr. Taylor says will bear repetition: "I call you a girl, but it is not the fashion any more. The girls are gone, and there is nobody left but young ladies. I like girls best. There used to be a flock of Carolines in Lowville, and as fair a flock as ever wore muslin. There were Caroline Collins. Caroline Northrup, Caroline Dayan, and ever so many more. There were Cornelias, Janes, Elizabeths, Marys and Psulinas. They were all girls and they never scorned the title. Now they would be Carries and Nellies, Lizzies, Mamics, Jensies and Carries and Nellies, Lizzies, Mamics, Jensies and Carries and Nellies, Lizzies, Mamics, Jensies and Carries and Ca nies and Cernies, and young ladies withal, every daughter of them. Let us not end our names in art et being a fool according to rule. Let us learn to work worstead cats of impossible pink, if we must, but let us know how to make Indian and a golden lost of corn breed as well. pudding and a golden lost of corn bread as well.
Let us tak French, if we can, but let us avoid "slang" as we would pestilence and famine.
I'ure and undefiled English never sounds so musically as it does from the unadulerated lips of a genuine girl. Let us learn the exquisits art of a genuine gard. Det us learn the exquisity art of keeping young. You read of Roman ruins. I think I have heard Tyre, Tadmor and Thebes mentioned once or twice, but there is nothing so ancient in a'l this world as an old diapidated heart. It is everybody's duty, especially every girls', to keep young. Now to you and your chasemates:

classmates: Pear girls, I pray you read the took of Ruth, That old love story, beautiful as truth; Of one who lives in everlasting youth, Ard thy with her to truth, "Forever thine." 'Toy God my God, and thy people mine!' So such you keep in loving step with time, And life's sweet cadence prove a perfect rhyme And when at last the song is done,
And level shines the dying sun.
Another dawn will show its early light, And bid 'good morn' though you have said
